

Discussion: On-line forums as democratic tool?

Posted on Jan 23, Posted by Administrator Category ACTA online discussions

source: socialmediawatch.net On-line forums are defined as e-democracy technique for promoting new spaces of deliberation by enabling citizens to exchange and share respective political opinions among themselves. Main goal of this on-line tool is to enhance the process of citizen's opinion formation through their deliberative engagement. On-line forums can also support e-consultations during decision-making by providing the general public, experts and interest groups with developments in a policy field and invite them to respond (Trechsel et al 2003).

Today, on-line forums acting as democratic space are facing many challenges such as:

1. not much conversation among participants (dialogue issue)
2. absence of rational-critical discourse in cyberspace (deliberation issue)
3. abundance of alternative internet communication tools (information overload issue)
4. difficulties with assessing democratic impact (slacktivism issue)

On the other hand on-line forum are still regarded as a powerful e-democracy tool to support participation in public life, strengthen communities and democracy by enabling:

5. inclusive engagement and active citizenship
6. open and transparent government

7. promoting and advancing political democratization
8. technical simplicity and accessibility

This discussion is aiming to build upon existing practice by identifying both positive and negative experiences of using internet forums for democratic participation by young people as well to propose decision-makers (politicians & government) how they should include internet forum into democratic decision-making.

Thus, the discussion starting questions are:

1. Which aspects of internet forum are motivating you to use them as democratic tool and which aspects are discouraging you?
2. How would you like to see internet forums as a democratic tool in the future?
3. If you were a decision-maker, in which way would you use internet forum as democratic tool?

Time frame: Discussion will end on 17th of February 2013. The summary results of discussion will be submitted to decision makers as well presented at the ACTA conference in Maribor (Slovenia) in March 2013.
