Mateja (moderator) : @Hans H. : Dear Christian Engström, ("ahoi" as we say in the german pirate party ;-) Many people in the creative industry are looking for new business models. They try to find sustainable ways to enable (and to finance) the production of content for newspapers, books, music, software, etc. I don't expect, that you have the answer ;-) however I would like to hear an estimate from you: In 2030, what will be the ratio of old-school licenced content, vs. creative-commons-style content. Or to ask the other way round: How much content will be financed by self-financing (copies and how much content will be financed by other source (sponsors, merchandising, voluntary work, consulting services...)?

Mateja (moderator) : Jure, also your question will be presented to the MEPs, thank you one more time

Mateja (moderator) : Dear Matija, thank you very much for your question/comment. Simon Delakorda will present it to the MEPs

Jure Č. : so your stance is that 'non-commercial' violation of open-source license, should not be punishable?

Mateja (moderator) : Jure Č. ok,
